Women's History Month

There has been talk recently about whether the United States should have celebration months, such as March's Women's History Month. Some people argue that having celebration months causes division and focuses too much on the past, instead of current issues facing the groups being celebrated. However, having celebration months highlights the lived experiences of a particular group. Experiences that may have been left out of the history books or have been downplayed in their importance. National celebration months can be an opportunity to educate, provide recognition and affirmation, and it can be a source of awareness and a call to action. Women's history month is no different.

Throughout history, women have significantly contributed to the advancement of science, politics, literature, and social movements. Traditional history books have focused primarily on the achievements of men. Having the opportunity to highlight the achievements of women is a small way of correcting this historical oversight.

Women have played an equal role in society but with less than equal recognition. Most people have heard of Marie Curie and her work on radioactivity, but lesser heard names offer equal importance. Tu Youyou discovered a life-saving treatment for malaria which has saved millions of lives. Indira Gandhi was known as the most powerful woman in the world during her tenure as the prime minister of India. Claudette Colvin was the first to defy segregation laws on a bus, nine months before Rosa Parks. Hedy Lamarr was not only a film star, but also a scientist. Her inventions eventually led to the development of Wi-Fi and Bluetooth. The list of accomplished women can be never ending, but what of the struggles of women today?

Women face many barriers today. While women's equality has come a long way over the years, there are still hurdles to face. On average, women earn 82% of what men earn.¹ It's even less for Black women who earn 70% as much as a white man and Hispanic women who earn only 65% as much as white men.¹ Unequal pay affects a woman's lifetime earnings and how much they are able to save for retirement.

Part of the reason for unequal pay is women's unequal presence in leadership roles. In 2023, women CEOs were found in top executive positions only 10.4% of the time at Fortune 500 companies.² Other career limiting opportunities include sexual discrimination as part of toxic work environments. Women's health issues can also affect them in the workplace.

Pregnancy discrimination and bias against working mothers can lead to fewer opportunities for advancement. Medical plans that limit access to contraception and maternal healthcare can be restrictive. The stigma of other reproductive health problems faced by women can include sometimes debilitating menstrual pain which can lead to missed work or missed school. Also, missed days of work or school can be caused by period poverty, where women and girls are unable to afford menstrual products.

Women tend to be judged more harshly than men for their choices. Women have unrealistic beauty standards which can lead to poor body image, self-loathing, depression, eating disorders and self-harming behavior. They face different pressures than men which often revolve around juggling work and family responsibilities. These pressures felt by women in the workplace are of course also felt by women in politics and media.

The voices of women in politics are heard far too infrequently. Only 26% of the U.S. Senate is made up of women; the U.S. House fared only slightly better at 28.7%; and out of 50 state governors, only 12 of them are women.³ Without women's voices at the table helping to make laws and regulations, we lose out on their valuable experiences and viewpoints.

Women play a crucial role in society. They contribute to the economy by starting businesses, increasing household incomes, and reducing poverty. This leads to stronger, more resilient communities. Empowered women help to build safer communities. When their voices are heard, they address issues like domestic violence, gender-based discrimination and social inequality. This leads to lower crime rates and improved community well-being.

Women's voices matter; women's history month matters; all celebration months matter.

A Note from the Office of Equity & Human Rights

Each year, the Office of Equity & Human Rights awards two Dubuque Equitable Community Grants, the goal of which is to provide funding to assist non-profits, businesses, clubs, organizations, and groups of passionate residents in implementing their ideas to make Dubuque a more equitable place to live and to support community leadership in alignment with at least one of the City of Dubuque's Five-Year Goals. This year we had a record 20 organizations apply!

We are excited to announce that this year's grant recipients are Afriwell Hub Inc., and the Dubuque Visiting Nurse Association (VNA).

Afriwell Hub, Inc. will use the grant to fund the African Vibes event. This inaugural event will celebrate African culture, promote cultural exchange, and empower African creatives through music, storytelling, dance, and food. This event will foster inclusivity, and strengthen community cohesion while empowering skilled African immigrants and enriching the Dubuque community through an immersive and engaging cultural experience

The grant awarded to the Visiting Nurse Association's Maternal Health program will be used to provide educational materials, portable Pack 'n Play cribs, and sleep sacks to a diverse population of Marshallese and Hispanic families to improve safe sleep and play for infants with the intention of reducing the risk of SIDS. The VNA Maternal Health Program strives to educate community members on the best practice to provide safe environments for children.

Congratulations to the recipients!
